Defending the Social Licence of Farming Feb 17 2022 Issues including climate variability, water scarcity, animal welfare and declining biodiversity have led to increasing demands on farmers to conduct and communicate their farming practices so as to protect their 'social licence to farm'. Farmers are increasingly expected to demonstrate their social and environmental responsibility as a pre-condition to being allowed to carry out their preferred farming and commercial practices. Current examples include the live animal export trade, battles over protection of aquifers from mining, and contests over rural carbon emissions. In Defending the Social Licence of Farming, authors from Australia, the USA, Europe and Iceland document the diverse issues associated with the 'social licence to farm'. They provide examples of different sectors' strategies and experiences, and give specific indications of what is involved in coping successfully with this political and legal dimension of farming. As resources become scarce and society's expectations more diverse and demanding, farming can expect that social licence issues will become both more difficult and more important. The book suggests that the old models of response, largely focused on defensive positions, will often be insufficient to protect the interests of both farmers and the community. This book will provide a useful stimulus for innovation and proactive policies to defend the social licence of the farm sector.

The Social License Dec 30 2022 This unique book combines a colourful history of Bolivian politics with some of the most advanced quantitative techniques yet developed for socio-political risk analysis. This is the story of how a foreign-owned private sector mining company (Minera San Cristobal - MSC) earned, lost, and regained its social licence to operate. Robert Boutilier and Ian Thomson, leading experts in stakeholder management theory and practice, transform the concept of the SLO from a metaphor to a management tool. The book traces the development of new concepts and measures in the field of stakeholder engagement while following the narrative of a community struggling with a fundamental change in its identity from a declining, malnourished llama-herding village to one of the richest towns in Bolivia. This remarkable story will inspire practitioners in the field of stakeholder management; it will provide an invaluable roadmap for professionals working on land re-use projects in the energy, mining, and conservation sectors; it will make stakeholder relations concepts and techniques accessible to students through an engaging and in-depth case study; and it will open your eyes to one of the most fascinating accounts of how two different cultures collided and then came together to address different but aligned goals.

The Social Licence for Financial Markets Jan 19 2022 This book is about what Mark Carney has called ‘the social licence for financial markets’ and how it can point us towards a more sustainable future. Author David Rouch argues that what it reveals contrasts sharply with the usual portrayals of markets as places of unrestrained financial self-interest. Drawing attention to a more complex reality and the presence of justice-focused aspirations in finance can positively impact individual, institutional, and systemic behaviour: change, not imposed by regulators, but emerging from the very substance of market relationships. The finance sector should have a key role in addressing humanity’s increasingly pressing sustainability challenges. Yet the relationship between finance and society has not recovered from the 2008 crisis and the scandals and austerity that followed. The Covid-19 pandemic and its economic fallout is sharpening some of the issues and creating new ones. Recognising that financial markets operate subject to a social licence has the potential to galvanise market participants in tackling these challenges, strengthening social solidarity on which markets also depend, and to provide coordinates for navigating a way through the post-pandemic social, political and economic landscape.

Establishing a Social Licence to Operate Amidst Complexity Oct 16 2021 The concept of earning a 'social licence to operate' (SLO) emerged in the mining industry in the 1990s as one important way in which the social dimensions of mineral development activities can be considered and addressed by mining governance actors. It implies that local communities have issued their support for a mining project that is located proximate to them and that this support is broad-based and ongoing. Where a SLO is not issued by local communities, the potential for financial, regulatory, and reputational costs for mining companies significantly increases, and in some instances projects may become unable or unviable to advance. While valuable research has begun to emerge on the SLO, there remain some notable research gaps. In particular, a need for additional empirical and theoretical research that uncovers those factors leading to the issuance (or non-issuance) of a SLO at different mining operations has been identified. Such research is needed in order to develop an understanding of which mining governance models function best and in what combination, and how model effectiveness varies through differing social, political, and economic contexts. Research of this type has important implications for the sustainable development of global mineral resources, as it can help identify ways in which desirable mining-community outcomes can be achieved and local conflict avoided. In an effort to address this research gap, this thesis sought to explore the governance dimensions of SLO and the obstacles and opportunities associated with its effective implementation in the mining industry. This thesis is presented in manuscript format, but has been prepared in such a way as to comprise a conceptual whole. Introductory and methodological chapters are first presented, followed by four manuscripts of publication quality and length. Concluding remarks and supplementary research materials are provided at the end of the thesis. The research conducted for this thesis was qualitative in nature and employed comparative case study methodologies, key informant interviewing, participant observation, and a comprehensive literature review. In the manuscripts that follow, the origins of the SLO concept are explored from the perspective of governance and sustainability theories, and the complex role of state, market, civil society, and hybrid governance and institutional arrangements in shaping SLO outcomes are reviewed. The thesis then presents a complex systems-based analytic framework for assessing SLO determinants and outcomes in the mining industry and applies it to a case study of the Red Dog Mine in Alaska, USA. Following this, the results of a comparative case study analysis of four international mining operations (i.e. Red Dog Mine in Alaska, USA; Minto Mine in Yukon, Canada; the proposed Tambogrande Mine in Peru, and; the Ok Tedi Mine in Papua New Guinea) are presented, using the complex systems approach previously described. The thesis then discusses five `guiding principles' for establishing a SLO that emerged from the analysis, including: 1) context is key; 2) a social licence to operate is built on relationships; 3) sustainability is a dominant concern for communities; 4) local benefits provision and public participation play a crucial role; and 5) adaptability is needed to confront complexity. Refined conceptualizations of the SLO that emerged during the research are also explored and new definitions of SLO and a resilient SLO are presented. The thesis then describes a series of guidelines for SLO analysis and management in the mining industry, which mineral developers must address in an iterative manner. They include: 1) address SLO prerequisites; 2) analyze the SLO context; 3) overcome key SLO challenges; 4) build a meaningful SLO; and 5) ongoing monitoring and adaptive management. A discussion of research contributions, limitations, and future research needs is also provided at the end of this thesis.
